The Roberts Building is a 1-story commercial building that is classified as a one-part commercial block. It has a rectangular plan and, because it is on a lot that slopes sharply to the south, has a partial basement to the rear. The walls are of brick, although a shed-roofed addition on the rear is sheathed with metal siding. The building is modestly detailed; however, its most distinctive features are the segmental-arched openings on the front and side elevations. The building occupies a corner lot at the southwest corner of Pilar and Fredonia streets in Nacogdoches' central business district.

The front, which faces north onto Pilar Street, has a three-bay configuration. Each of the bays has double doors, although those in the outer bays are blocked by benches which prevent their use as entrances. Each bay has a fixed, two-light transom set within the segmental arch. the parapet, which repeats the three-part motif, has slightly inset panels.

Because the building occupies a corner lot, the east wall is exposed to the street and the include of the property, as well as the partial basement, is visible. Windows at the store level have the segmental arched openings that resemble those on the front; however, they have double-hung windows with 1/1 lights and wood sashes. The segmental arches are echoed in the partial basement. The rear two-thirds of the basement possibly may have a historic addition that, if it is not original, is sympathetic to the structure's design, detailing and materials. A frame shed addition was built on top of the basement and is attached to the store. The addition has metal-covered siding.

The Roberts Building is in good condition, and the only insensitive alteration is the on the rear which mitigates its impact to the structure's overall historic character.

The Roberts Building, one of the least-altered historic buildings fronting on the old Principal Square, is a noteworthy example of an early 20th century commercial building. Although several examples with similar detailing and architectural features survive in the downtown, few retain their historic integrity to such a high degree. Consequently, the Roberts Building is nominated to the National Register under Criterion C, and because it is indicative of local commercial expansion during the early 20th century, the structure is associated with Community Planning and Development in Nacogdoches: 1830-1940.

Ever since a formal town plan was established in 1779, land around the Principal Square or Public Square has traditionally been considered some of the most valuable property in Nacogdoches. Merchants erected their stores nearby to take advantage of the almost constant flow of people who were drawn to the square. After the arrival of the railroad in 1883, the central business district expanded primarily along Main Street; however, property around the square remained the most prestigious and important. In about 1904, the Roberts family erected this building on the site of the old homestead of John S. Roberts, a prominent figure in early Nacogdoches and a signer of the Texas Declaration of Independence. Although the Roberts family was responsible for the building's construction, they apparently never used it themselves and instead leased it to others. Past tenants have included a grocery store, a warehouse, a plumbing shop, a barber shop, and an automotive repair shop. The building is best known as the City Cafe, where reportedly Bonnie Parker worked as a waitress before taking up a life of crime with Clyde Barrow.

The building, which anchors the east corner of the block immediately south of the Principal or Public Square, is a finely crafted structure that has changed little since its construction in about 1904. Nacogdoches at one time had many similar buildings but almost all have had false facades applied to the storefronts or have had important architectural fabric removed.
